Independent Motion Pictures at the Auditorium.

Everywhere you go about town you hear people talking of the superior quality of the Independent motion pictures now being shown at the Auditorium. The carefully selected, clear, steady films which the management is showing are very interesting and contain some wonderfully clever acting as well as plenty of clean comedy. The Fighting Parson, a production of the Nestor company, is a tensely dramatic picture and contains much clever acting by well known performers. The Powers reel, His Yankee Girl, in which there is a girl's thrilling ride for life to save her lover who is about to be executed although innocent. The Sultan's Sentence, a gripping subject of an oriental court, appropriately set with beautiful costumes and scenery of that country. Others are A Mexican's Jealousy, etc. Mr. Warren Smith, who is gaining in favor at each performance with his clear, strong voice, will sing today the broadway Indian song, and the pretty ballad, In the Wildwood Where the Bluebells Grow.

BREED THEATER.

"Way Out West." Thrilling Western Feature.

In the splendid bill at the Breed theater, there is no one special artist who deserves to be featured, as every person taking part in the entire bill is equally essential to the success of the picture in which he appears. In the western feature, entitled Way Out West, two cowboys have the leading parts, but the minor characters are all played by genuine artists, such as appear on every bill at the Breed theater. In the Biograph picture, entitled The Place at the Window, it is as usual there, for this enterprising company has secured at an enormous expense all of the best talent in the field covered by them, and as a consequence each person appearing is familiar to the patrons of the Breed, and has become a prime favorite. Both the western picture and the exquisite human story of the Place at the Window, are real gems, and deal with a side of life that appeals most strongly to every one who sees them.
 Real thrills and real touches of emotion make these pictures more than attractive, and are witnessed by large crowds at every performance.
 The gorgeous floral studies are a revelation and wonder to all, while the splendid singing of Mr. Plouf in the song, "Every girl I get the other fellow steals," compels him to respond to triple encores.

Just as Good for Connecticut.

"It has come to pass," says Mayor Gaynor speaking of the law's delay, "that business men prefer to let criminal offenders against them go rather than to prosecute them." And The New York World adds that, with the president of the United States and the mayor of New York, both good lawyers and experienced judges, giving their attention to the situation, something tangible should come of the movement for reform. It is to be hoped that Massachusetts will not lag behind in the procession.—Boston Transcript.
